Handbook of Case Study Research in the Social Sciences

Edited by Peter Rule, Stellenbosch University and Vaughn M. John, University of KwaZulu-Natal, South Africa

'Case study research is ubiquitous in the field of adult and continuing education. The editors did a great service to the field through their book, Your Guide to Case Study Research (2011). This Handbook takes understandings of case study research to a new level by expanding and deepening engagement with case study research across disciplines and fields. This is a welcome addition to the literature and will, like their previous book, become an indispensable reference for case study researchers globally.'

Handbook on Inequality and Social Capital

Edited by Steve McDonald, North Carolina State University, US, Rochelle Côté, Memorial University of Newfoundland, Canada and Jing Shen, University of Toronto, Canada

'The Handbook on Inequality and Social Capital admirably achieves its editors' goals of comprehensiveness, inclusiveness and usefulness. Rather than attempting to define the concept of social capital, the editors embrace its multi-level, sprawling meaning in 28 chapters that cover the field, with authors from every continent and a multitude of disciplines. It should be useful for established scholars and those just entering the field.'

NEW IN PAPERBACK How to Think Like a Realist

A Methodology for Social Science

Ray Pawson, University of Leeds, UK

'Realist methodology is blossoming, and realist studies are burgeoning. This is no flash in the pan. Ray Pawson's work is both the product and the source of this intellectual evolution. The book makes the proposition that realist principles underpin science in all its guises and makes tiny, tentative steps in tracing the common realist tenets. If he is correct, we will be reading this manifesto for many years to come.'

Social Justice, Welfare and EU Law

Measuring Integration in the Visegrád Countries

Sára Hungler, Centre for Social Sciences and ELTE, Hungary

'Based on Nancy Fraser's theory of social justice, Sara Hungler's eye-opening book delves into both the achievements and the loopholes of the European social model. Through a masterful combination of legal analysis and a social science approach, the author provides an insightful, integrated inquiry into the Visegrad Countries highlighting the current and prospective impact of EU policies aiming at reducing poverty and curbing social exclusion in the European Union.'

OPEN ACCESS Silent Pain and Public Policy

Suicide and Social Welfare in the Middle East and North Africa

Edited by Anis Ben Brik, Hamad Bin Khalifa University, Qatar

'Silent Pain and Public Policy offers a profound if troubling exploration of the intersection between political stability, economic crises, and mental health. Examining stable monarchies to conflict regimes, this book reveals how socio-political contexts shape suicide rates and social welfare responses, providing new critical insights and fresh policy recommendations for addressing this pressing, though often shrouded, public health issue.'

Fragmenting Cities

The State, Territorial Stigmatization and Urban Marginality

Troels Schultz Larsen and Kristian Nagel Delica, Roskilde University, Denmark

'Fragmenting Cities is a bold and original contribution to the political sociology of urban marginality inspired by Pierre Bourdieu and grounded in a deep historical case study of the making and unmaking of the so-called "ghettos" of Denmark. It is packed with sharp observations, smart theorizing and lucid policy elaborations reaching far beyond its national borders: in short, a must-read for serious students of the neoliberal metropolis.'

The Rise of Knowledge Brokers in Global Education Governance

Edited by Chanwoong Baek, Geneva Graduate Institute, Switzerland and Gita Steiner-Khamsi, Columbia University, US and Geneva Graduate Institute, Switzerland

'The notion that in the formulation and enactment of education policy and governance a range of new knowledge brokers emerged, beyond the traditional producers of knowledge, is now widely recognized. What is less well understood however is how and why their influence grown so rapidly, and with what consequences. The essays in this important and timely book interrogate these questions in ways that are empirically grounded and analytically astute. They also examine how the various knowledge brokers, both traditional and emerging, collaborate and compete, and how their emergence has created a complicated and highly contested space of knowledge production in education, giving rise a range of important issues that policy makers and researchers can ill afford to overlook.'
